Short for programmable read-only memory, a memory chip on which the data can only be written once. Once a program has been written on a dance, it remains there forever. Unlike RAM, the Proms retain their content when the computer is off. The difference between a PROM and a ROM (read-only memory) is that a prom is produced as a blank memory, while a ROM is programmed during the production process. To write data on a prom chip, you need a special device called PROM PROGRAMMATOR or PROM BURNER. The programming process of a dance is sometimes called burning the dance. An eprom (canceled programmable read-read memory) is a special type of prom which can be canceled by exposing it to ultraviolet light. Once canceled, it can be reprogrammed. An EEPROM is similar to a dance, but it requires only electricity to be deleted. deleted.
