The Audi Q3 did not have any iSize seating positions. They provided a copy of a test report showing the angle at which a child would be lying when seated in those positions. Furthermore, the seat included technology that ensured that when the headrest was adjusted relative to the height of the child, the recline position of the child automatically adjusted in order to maintain a reclined angle. There was also an additional insert to give extra support to younger babies. Britax stated that when installed in accordance with the Baby Safe iSize user guide and Audi Q3 Manual, the seat was safe to install and use and would not place the occupant in an unsafe position. Britax understood that the complainant had been told by retailer staff that the seat was unsafe for use in their vehicle in combination with their selected car seat base. The ad stated “Child car seats do not always fit every seat in the vehicle. Based on the vehicles we tested, here are the fitting details of the child car seat you choose showing where it will best fit in your car”, “see vehicle handbook for details of Universal seating locations” and “It is advisable to make a test installation with your retailer in your car please ask for a member of staff who is Britax Romer trained before you buy a child seat”. It further stated the different types of seating positions with which the seat was compatible. The complainant, who was pregnant at the time, had purchased the Baby Safe iSize car seat to use in combination with the Baby Safe iSize flex base. We assessed the evidence provided by Britax. The test report on the Audi Q3 indicated that there were three ISOFIX positions in the vehicle, to which the Baby Safe iSize seat could be attached in combination with an ISOFIX base. We understood that the Baby Safe iSafe flex base was an ISOFIX base, compatible with ISOFIX positions. We considered that Britax had substantiated that the Baby Safe iSize seat was safe to use when correctly installed in the Audi Q3. <http://www.farmhousesardinia.com/userfiles/ctr-dvr-manual.xml>

We concluded that the ad was not misleading. The ad was investigated under CAP Code Edition 12 rules. The ASA may regard claims as misleading in the absence of adequate substantiation.
