Brother PEDBasic Software for Downloading Embroidery Designs Brother SE400 Review Blank Memory Card for the Brother SE400 I am trying to do embroidery and it's hard for me to do it I'm learning to get used to it. Need your help. Please let me know how to download and do other designs downloaded and sent to me by emails. Hope to receive your answer. I'm happy to find you too. My stepdaughter borrowed my wife's machine and loaned it out. When she got it back the upper tension control won't tighten I can't get the front cover off, but I can see the tension spring and it don;t move when you turn the knob. Maybe the service manual would show how to get the front cover off lol It's that I'm concerned about copyright issues. Brother makes the User Manuals freely available on their site. But they're hard to find, so I link to them here as a service. That's entirely different than posting a scanned manual. I'm not running a repair or support service. I'm only trying to help people with a hobby that I love. Sorry, I guess it's not so obvious that the blue headers are links. <http://www.restaurant-lyons.fr/userfiles/daihatsu-charade-user-manual.xml>

She's used it quite a bit so I suspect something's jiggled out of place and is now blocking the operation. Have you tried eBay Also is there an instructional DVD Thank you. I have been reading everywhere and this may be a crazy question but can you use an material such as a shirt to embroidery. Can I use this machine to embroidery on shirts and jackets Cotton shirts and teeshirts are fine. It's not so much that it's a shirt, but what material is it made of and where and how big do you want the embroidery. This is a complicated topic involving stabilizers. Knits need different stabilizers than cotton to keep them from stretching. A flimsy shirt like a gauze of light silk might not work so well. It also depends on the design. A heavy, dense design will need a heavier fabric to support it. Knits and light fabric need a very, light open design. You need access to the embroidery area. Or heavy, with layers of lining would be difficult. Medium or lightweight denim would probably be OK. How heavy, I really can't tell you. I live in the Bay Area, California and I don't have very heavy clothes that I embroider. It also depends on the size of the design. If you want to embroider the back of a jacket, for example, you'll need a larger machine. Hope it helps. I am new to the se400, but I have been embrodering since 1997 when I got my first emb machine. But surgery stopped my progress, along with my little shop and I had to move to a senior home, with little space to move around in. My xl6000 went into the floor when I tried to drive it around the sewing table into the corner of the tiny bedroom She fell off and was destroyed. I sold her parts for little or nothing and bought the se400 about 6 months ago. I saw something about a flippal for scanning and ideas begin poppin in my old retired brain——is it possible. <http://www.internet-trade.cz/UserFiles/daihatsu-charade-workshop-manual-g200.xml>

I'm not quite yet in a senior home, but I certainly hope to take my SE400 with me when I go and be able to continue making things even though I'm a lot slower than I used to be. Congratulations on your perseverance and having creative ideas. Blessings, Kamala But if I'm traveling or otherwise away from the computer, it could take me a few days.
