Hicks 3.0 out of 5 stars So perhaps all the frustration I'm about to mention is a small price to pay and I've been ungrateful, but here are the downsides that I experienced. The following things have been hugely irritating 1 It is a very noisy printer, but I did learn to adjust to this. 2 It comes with mega amounts of software that in my case used vast amounts of computer resources affecting computer performance when the printer was on. What finally did help was to get rid of some of the software that was not essential. For example, there is software that allows automatic reordering of ink cartridges when ink levels are low, which I am not using.

3 The printer would decide in the midst of a print job maybe two pages left to print that it was time to do a maintenance task before resuming. This seemed to happen the most when I was in a major rush, needing to grab the document ASAP and run out the door to a meeting. 4 Again, especially when I was in a rush for no apparent reason about once a month the printer would decide to print in ULTRA SLOW MOTION where it took about three minutes for a page of black text to print. Sometimes just one page would print like that and then normal printing would resume, and other times the slow motion printing continued until the end of the document. This was enormously frustrating. 5 Ink is expensive! 6 There is no paper feeder, so anytime I needed copies of a document, it meant putting each page on the scanner flatbed, one at a time, which was very time consuming. 7 When canceling a print job, it sometimes not always took a long time several minutes for the printer to reset to be ready to accept a new print job. 8 The main paper tray does not hold much paper maybe 100 sheets so for frequent email and document printing, it ran out of paper a lot. So, if you want quality printing, this printer will be a dream come true. As I buy a new printer, I am worried that no other reasonably priced printer will compare in this regard. If you want speed from this machine, lower your expectations, and gear up for some unexpected delays. And, when you install the software, you may want to be selective and not too quick to install everything. At first, I thought it was OK too. On the best quality paper I used both the high gloss and matte, the prints seem to be pretty good. But the Mac software issue is EXTREMELY frustrating. Why won't it just save all my settings correctly so I can just click to print versus having to verify certain things just to print a 4x6 from iPhoto. The paper is too thin and the prints never seem to dry. I can forget trying to send them to any one in a card.

Even after drying over night, if I tuck a couple in an envelope, the still stick together in spots. Same with a frameget all sorts of sticky spots on the glass. The standard paper should at least work, I would just expect the advanced paper to be heavier and have better overall image quality. However, as it turns out, if you actually want DRY images, you cant seem to use the standard. My wife has given up on this and uses my inlaws Epson Snap photo printer. Sidebyside, image quality is about the same. But the paper that comes in the standard bundle with ink is considerably betterthicker, better feel, and the ink dries considerably faster and completely too. Add to that, its easier to use too. Its always out of ink and about the time I replace 12 cartridges, others run out. Buying this printer or the new, updated version of it is liking throwing your money away. Dont not buy this printer. It worked fine until I had to change the yellow ink cartridge for the first time about 3 months ago. It said the ink cartridge was depleted after I put the new one in. I bought another package of all the colors, after trying everything suggested on the internet, and kept getting different messages. After awhile it would say that different colors were depleted, not just the yellow, even though I had changed all of them. I took them all out, reinserted them, still the same. I was using genuine HP cartridges. HP said it is a hardware malfunction and tried to sell me a new printer. When I said no to that, they gave me names and addresses of service centers in my area to take it to, at my expense. When I told them I thought they should pay to have it fixed, since I had no way of knowing it had a malfunction until I needed to change the yellow, they said no. If you google this problem, you will find pages and pages of people with the same problem who cant find a solution either. This will be the last HP product I will ever buy.
